GIANTS HOPEFUL OF BEING ABLE TO HALT YANKS IN TILT TODAY

Hal Schumacher Picked To Stop The Wicked Bats of the Yankees

PEARSON FOR YANKEES

Yankees' Two Victories So Decisive That Interest Is On the Decline

By International News Service
NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—(INS)—Gotham's "subway" world series assumed the appearance of a "walkaway" for the Yankees today as the Fall classic shifted to the Polo Grounds, home field of the battered but still hopeful Giants.

Virtually all the National Leaguers have left, except for Hal Schumacher, is a determination to prevent Jake Ruppert's busters from scoring a grand slam. In their two 3-1 triumphs the Yanks have blasted both Carl Hubbell and Cliff Melton, Giant aces, from the mound, while both of their own pitchers have gone the route.

As the Giants' Dick Bartell so aptly phrased it—"If Schumacher can't stop them in the third game, we're sunk."

And Schumacher, once the "prince" of the Giants' hurling staff but not so very effective this year, gets his chance today. Against him will be another right-hander, Monte Pearson, whose flash throughout the past campaign was dimmed by illness and injury.

The weather man provided the stimulant both moundmen need for a good performance. A fair and cool day dawned with just sufficient "zip" in the air to benefit Schumacher whose efficiency dwindles under a warm sun.

The Yankees' two victories have been so decisive that interest in the series as shown by yesterday's attendance of approximately 57,000, might be on the decline. Still a capacity house of 50,000 was expected to jam the Polo Grounds.

Police and Constables Hear of Liquor Laws

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 8.—Police and Constables Association of Bucks County met in the Court House, last night. The meeting was presided over by Chief Welsh of this borough, who turned the meeting over to Arthur M. Eastburn, district attorney.

Mr. Eastburn introduced three members of the State Liquor Control Board, who explained the new legislation affecting the liquor laws. The speakers included Mr. Reitter, who told of the laws and explained the position of the enforcement officers in enforcing these laws. Thomas Gurein, Deputy Attorney General in charge of the prosecutions in the Philadelphia district, gave the details of the workings of his office.

It was stated that it is now necessary for an applicant for a liquor license to post a notice of his intention on the door of his place, so that those residing in the community may be aware of the fact. This is done so that those who know the applicant may testify either in his favor or against him.

It was also brought out that if the main income of a gasoline station is from the sale of gasoline, a license cannot be issued for the sale of beer or liquor there.

A license cannot be issued for places where young people congregate, such as soda fountains, ice cream parlors and candy stores, where the sale of beer would be a side issue.

Licenses will not be issued for places within 300 feet of a school, church or public building.

There are 240 men in Pennsylvania to enforce the liquor laws, and 42 of them are in District No. 1, including Bucks County.

One hundred percent of the money received from licenses goes back to the community in which the license is issued.

State Official To Visit Township Schools Soon

At the meeting of Bristol Township school board in Maple Shade school building, last evening, it was announced that Mr. Hare, of the Pennsylvania State Department of Education, will visit the district soon.

At that time, Mr. Hare will go over the school situation in the township with the school directors and supervising principal, with a view to working out a solution for the crowded conditions in the township schools. The board will consider building needs, discussing the problem from all angles, with Mr. Hare, it is stated.

All members were present, with Ira Brown presiding.

Committees reported, last evening, with the group in charge of repairs reporting all repair work attended to.

CONFER DEGREES AT MEETING OF GRANGE

Three Candidates Receive The Third and Fourth Degrees At Meeting

OBSERVE BOOSTER NITE

LANGHORNE, Oct. 8.—Third and fourth degrees were conferred upon three candidates at a very largely attended meeting of the Middletown Grange held in the Friends' school house, here, Wednesday evening.

The degrees were put on in full form by the degree team which included the officers of the grange, who were in charge of the master, Henry C. Pickering. Persons receiving the degree work were Mr. and Mrs. Blaine Patterson and Mrs. Catherine Paul.

The grange is planning to send a large delegation to Allentown to receive the sixth degree on Thursday, October 21. Practically all of these persons expect to receive the seventh or national degree at sessions of the National Grange in Harrisburg next month.

No meeting of the local grange was held on September 30 which marked the official close of the grange year. Usually at the close of the grange year the various groups of Patrons of Husbandry throughout the nation observe Booster Night. However, at the conclusion of the initiation the members of the local grange observed Booster Night in an informal manner, and at that time a communication from Louis J. Taber, master of the National Grange, was read. Similar communications have been sent to all subordinate granges throughout the country.

Before adjournment Mrs. Lillian Fassett was presented with a bedspread in recognition of having gained the most members during the past year. Refreshments were served during the social hour.

The next meeting of the grange will be held in the Friends' school house, here, on Wednesday evening, October 20. The program for that occasion has not as yet been arranged.

Search For Missing Man Believed Drowned

Philadelphia police began an intensive search for Ellwood C. Beale, wealthy Torresdale coal dealer, last night, when the body of a woman found in the Delaware River Sunday was identified as that of his wife, Mrs. Pearl Beale, 43.

Beale was the son of the late Albert Beale, of Croydon.

Ellwood C. Beale operated a coal yard in Bristol for a time. The Beales were last seen Saturday night in the grill of the Quaker City Yacht Club, Princeton street and the Delaware River, Torresdale, where they kept their 54-foot double cabin cruiser, Armida, moored 200 feet offshore.

In the belief that both may have perished in a river accident, harbor police began dragging the river near the yacht club. This theory was given credence by the fact the cruiser's 12-foot tender was missing.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

(Copyright, 1937, by The Baltimore Sun)

Again They Hope

ONE OF THE things from which Mr. Roosevelt has gotten most fun as President has been in keeping within his intimate circle, in addition to the group of advanced thinkers and smart young radicals, one or two mature men of conservative mind and character. While he invariably goes in the radical direction, it gives him a keen enjoyment to keep these conservative friends hopeful—and see how far he can drag them.

THEY COME and go. Some last longer than others, but they change in personnel nearly every year. From first to last there has been quite a string of them, and there are now one or two among his "close friends" impotent but hopeful. It is interesting to analyze the reasons that induce these men to go along in a direction they consider dangerous and with policies they know to be unsound. They can be divided roughly into three classes. First, there are those who are flattered by the White House connections, derive a certain social advantage as a Presidential intimate and like to feel important. Second, there are those who coldly argue that there being no real alternative in sight it is advantageous to have at least one man near the President who can present the other side, sometimes "slow him down," keep him from going to the extremes desired by the collectivist group of spenders who most appeal to his imagination and contribute to the picture of himself he likes to contemplate. The third group are those who feel that Mr. Roosevelt knows the essential fallacy of the New Liberalism, that his steps in that direction are necessary in order to "avert revolution," that he can be trusted not to go too far, and at bottom is sound and conservative, in complete accord with their ideas.

BENSALEM TAX RECEIPTS SHOW $2,000 INCREASE

Collections Are Ahead of The Amount at This Time Last Year

SCHOOL BOARD MEETS

CORNWELLS, Oct. 8.—Bensalem Township School Board members learned last evening that tax collections this year are running ahead of the collections for the same period last year by $2,000. This figure was given by treasurer Craig before the board at their first Fall meeting of the present school year. Charles Wenner, president of the board, presided at the meeting. All members were present.

The treasurer's report indicated that $37,246 has been collected thus far, while last year for the same period a little more than $35,000 was collected. The collections enabled the board to order paid temporary loans of more than $14,000 which were incurred toward school expenses last year.

L. L. Williams, secretary of the Board, reported that the sewage project, completed with the help of WPA funds, was finished September 21. The new system affords a complete removal of all wastes from the high school. Before the new system was completed there was a constant problem because of the use of much water, especially from the showers.

The secretary also reported that under the new law passed by the State legislature, teachers' salaries were increased by the sum of $1,595. This was a mandatory increase which provided for those teachers who did not receive raises in 1934 and 1935.

Mr. Abel reported to the Board that all teachers in the Township schools had returned again this year with the exception of Miss E. May Early. Miss Early was granted a year's leave of absence to complete studies at West Chester State Teachers College. Miss Early, who taught at the Andalusia school, is replaced this year by Miss Helen Ackerman, Philadelphia.

Oscar Schreiber, chairman of the building and grounds committee, reported that all miscellaneous repairs had been made to the school buildings at Andalusia, Cornwells, Edgington, Penn Valley and Treviso. Each building was thoroughly cleaned. Considerable painting was done, and other general repairs completed during the summer.

L. L. Williams, reporting for the purchasing committee, reported the purchase of necessary janitor's supplies, nurse's and medical supplies, and textbooks for the year. Owing to the increase of students in the commercial course 10 new business desks and typewriters were authorized to be purchased.

Charles Wenner and Oscar Schreiber both made reports to the Board of the meeting last Monday in Doylestown of the Bucks County School Directors' Convention. Both men explained in detail some of the new legislation that was brought up at the convention.

S. K. Faust, superintendent of the Bensalem schools gave a detailed report. Included in his report were those of the school doctor, Dr. A. L. MacKenzie, and the nurse, Miss Doris

EXCHANGE CLUB ESSAY AWARDS WON BY 2 GIRLS

District Prizes Are Secured By Sonia Johnson, Eunice McIlvaine

GUESTS OF CLUB

Essays Are Read By Authors; Andrew MacArthur Presents Awards

Announcement of winners in the essay contest recently conducted by the Exchange Club of Pennsylvania and New Jersey was made last night for this district, at a meeting of the Bristol Exchange Club. Both of the winners are girls and the winner of the first award receives $5 while $2.50 is given to the one awarded second honors.

The contest was conducted nationally by Exchange clubs throughout the entire country. The United States was divided into districts and the Bristol Exchange Club had charge of the contest in Bristol and the immediate vicinity.

Last night at the weekly meeting of the Bristol Exchange Club, Miss Sonia Johnson, Tullytown, winner of the first prize, and Miss Eunice McIlvaine, 212 Cedar street, Bristol, winner of the second prize, were entertained as guests of the club. The contest was conducted among students in the seventh and eighth grades of the public and parochial schools. They read their essays and were then presented with their awards by Andrew MacArthur, president of the club.

The speaker of the evening was Robert Lehman, who delivered a splendid discourse on the Constitution of the United States of America.

The essays which won first and second honors in the club contest, follow:

"The Value of American Citizenship" We read and discuss much of the chaotic conditions other than our own. Such conditions recall to us the value of citizenship in our land.

These values can be listed as the Freedom of religious worship. Be we Jew or Gentile, Protestant or Catholic or any other sect we may worship God as we wish or not at all. In contrast to this valuable asset of a people we find in some foreign countries like Russia, where man isn't allowed public worship or belief in any religion whatsoever. In Mexico churches have been closed.

Next is Freedom of the press. Our newspapers and news-reels give us the happenings of the day be they political, criminal or social doings.

Then there is Freedom of education. All may receive in our public schools, elementary or high school an education, with scholarships in our colleges and universities given to those capable of such learning.

In America the citizen enjoys better economic conditions of private life, far above the standard of living in many countries. He or she has more telephones, radios, automobiles, than any other one country. This is made possible to all citizens because of the Constitution, which guarantees to every citizen the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness as long as he doesn't violate the law. While it is true that an alien or an unnaturalized citizen may enjoy these advantages he has no guarantee that some time new laws might force him or compel him to give up these advantages and leave the country.

This brings us to consider the greatest value or privilege of citizenship enjoyed only by a citizen—the right of Franchise. The difference between a citizen of a country or a subject of a country is that while the latter is governed, the former helps to govern. This is how the right of Franchise is a citizen's most valued asset. By our power of voting, we can say how our country shall be ruled, can agree to or veto any laws that we do not think just. To do this we elect members to our state and Federal legislatures, as well as to local offices. We have the right to petition our courts.

The citizen has the right if he so fits himself by studying, trading to accumulate wealth and a high position. His person and property are inviolate and he can be deprived of either only through due processes of law. His home is his castle and he has the right to prevent any unlawful entry to that home.

In theory the government exists for the advantages of the citizen and not the citizen for the advantage of the government.

"The Value of American Citizenship" The most valuable gift any person could have or receive is American Citizenship. That is, in America, people have freedom of speech, freedom of press and freedom of religion. JERSEY AND THE WAVES

You have heard of Jersey justice, Jersey lightning and perhaps a word or two about Jersey mosquitoes. But you never have heard anything about Jersey ruling the waves.

Why hasn't New Jersey as good a right to rule the waves as may be claimed by Utah, for instance? New Jersey is much nearer the waves, unless you count the waves in Salt Lake. New Jersey, furthermore, is one of the thirteen original states; and, therefore, was around when the United States navy was born.

The Chamber of Commerce and Civics of the Oranges and Maplewood feels quite strongly about New Jersey's proper claims to consideration for naval honors. Did you ever hear of a battleship New Jersey? Probably not; for there has been no United States battleship or other ship of war named New Jersey for years and years and years.

So the Chamber of Commerce and Civics of the Oranges and Maplewood has forwarded to Secretary of the Navy Swanson a formal request that his very next battleship be named New Jersey. The request includes the arguments which we have roughly sketched and more. The Chamber of Commerce, etc., reminded Secretary Swanson that his own assistant secretary of the navy is Charles Edison, Assistant Secretary of the Navy Edison is not only a resident of New Jersey. He is also a member of the Chamber of Commerce and Civics of the Oranges and Maplewood.

Now that the ante fixed by the Washington conference has been raised to whatever the players want to make it and capital ships are again in fashion, we don't see why the Chamber of Commerce and Civics of the Oranges and Maplewood shouldn't get in on the ground floor in the battleship christening industry.

THE THINGS WE EAT

Fashion and taste are the world's taskmasters. When they change their whims, men get new jobs or lose the jobs they have.

Since ages past men have spoken of bread as the staff of life, but Americans are leaning less and less on that staff for support of their vitality. Before the Great War the people of the United States were consuming cereal grains at the rate of 340 pounds per person annually. At the present time that average has been cut down to less than 240 pounds per capita.

Instead of bread we are using milk and other dairy products, fruits, vegetables and meats. A curious feature of varying tastes or of estimates of values occurred in the case of pork and beef. In recent years the per capita consumption of pork has increased greatly, while that of beef has decreased. This is difficult to account for except that perhaps the responsiveness of pork production to demand has brought about frequent surpluses with consequent cheapening of pork products. The large increase in consumption of milk and vegetables is a result of health campaigns and general popular education.

But the effect of the changes in dietetic habits as a whole has been distinctly in favor of those agricultural regions in which general farming is practicable and is practiced. Education pays. By the time you are through college, you can get a job from the kid who quit in the seventh grade.

THE REASON they believe this is because they have been told so over and over again by Mr. Roosevelt himself. That is what he used to tell Mr. Lewis W. Douglas before the latter resigned. That is what, from time to time, he has told every one of the conservative friends who have been attached to him. Those among them who took him seriously eventually have been made to feel prize political saps. One after another they have grasped the fact that even though the President meant what he said when he said it, the influence of his radical advisers is too strong to combat and they have given up. But there has always been some one else to take the place of the departing and disillusioned conservative. There are one or two within the circle now—not potent, not really influential, but hopeful that before it is too late Mr. Roosevelt's intelligence will force him to act along the sound lines with which he has expressed himself privately as in accord. At the moment they are more than usually buoyed up with hope, insist they have reason to believe that in the coming session of Congress the President will adopt measures to dispel fear among business men and restore confidence. The reasons for this belief are at eye rate plausible.

FOR EXAMPLE, they say that since the President left, alarm over conditions has begun to permeate Administration circles. Even the less astute know the Roper declarations that everything is lovely and not a cloud in the business sky are complete bunk. The railroads are in terrible shape and the construction industry is flat. No amount of statistics alters the fact that business has slackened and that within the past few weeks many thousands of men have been laid off. Actually the situation is acute, and unless something real is done we are heading into something pretty bad. That is the way the "close friend" conservatives talk at the moment, and what they have communicated to the President since his return from the West. A genuine drive to cut down expenses, balance the budget by broadening the tax base, elimination of the undistributed profit tax and reduction in the capital gains tax, are all being urged.

AT ONE TIME and another the President privately has favored all these things. If he can be got to act on them now it will electrically business, restore confidence and avert trouble. Thus argue his conservative friends, whose hope of action is strengthened by the fact that one or two of the radicals among the Presidential intimates, alarmed at what they know, are ready for that kind of action, profess to believe in it. Perhaps they are right. It would be pleasant to believe, but the odds are against it. The odds favor the speedy departure of another disillusioned conservative and continued progress toward the crackup. The truth is that at times Mr. Roosevelt probably longs to act on these lines, but he can't do it without sacrificing his popularity with the glib-tongued masses whom he has been teaching to hate all business men and in whose muggy minds he is still the shining hero who is to give them more money for less work. Some day they, too, will wake up and see things as they are. Some of them are beginning to now.

"THE SILVER ROOD MYSTERY"

by Lewis Allen Browne

CHAPTER XXXIX

Colton opened a brief case and produced the evidence, attested copies of the letter to the museum, the will, the police record of the arrest of Lutzmann. There was no doubt but that the story of Professor Lardeau was true—at least up to the point where he said that he did not kill Monteth.

Many other things were already revolving in my mind. I wanted to have a talk with Harper and Foxcroft. I wondered what they would do with Lardeau. As if reading my mind, the professor spoke.

"I do not wish to leave until you have found the man who killed Mr. Monteth," he said. "I wish to be at hand. I hope that I will not be locked up. I assure you I shall remain, if it takes you weeks, months, or a year."

"That's fair enough. Will you excuse us a moment?"

Lardeau bowed. I went to the other office, Foxcroft and Harper followed me.

"Look him up," Harper said. "Wait a minute, Sergeant," Foxcroft pleaded. "You wouldn't lock Griswold up, I don't believe Lardeau is any more guilty than I am."

Despite the gravity and the mystery, this amused me. Harper, convinced that Lardeau was the man, Foxcroft sure it was Griswold.

I gave them a surprise.

"Will you permit me to entertain Lardeau at home tonight? At Major Forrest's, I mean?" I asked.

"What's the idea?" Harper demanded.

"It's such a crazy idea that I want to work it out. I want to put Lardeau at his ease. And I want to know why that silver rood was stolen last night."

"Stolen? Heavens above, we need that! I should never have left it there," Harper cried.

"Perhaps you should. I'm not sure yet."

I told them all I knew about it. We managed to talk Harper out of his determination to lock up the professor, for the present, at least. "He won't run away," I assured them.

I picked up the telephone and got Sally.

"Well—what have you learned?" she cried as soon as she recognized my voice.

"Two volumes, and no solution. Now get this, my dear. I am going to bring Professor Lardeau home for dinner, and for the night. Will you, while Mason is serving tea this afternoon, announce in his hearing that I am bringing Professor Lardeau out? And watch him."

"Yes—but you do have the craziest notions—"

"Be a nice Old Girl, Sally, do that."

She promised.

Foxcroft and Mason were listening and eying me with great curiosity.

"Now what, Harley?" Foxcroft asked.

"That's what I want to know. Perhaps I will find out."

Whatever I had in mind was so hazy, and apparently so absurd, that I didn't care to try to explain it.

We went back and I invited Professor Lardeau to be a guest at the home of my father-in-law. Foxcroft told him who I was. He protested that he must not be put into a novel. I assured him that his name would never be used. He asked if he was under arrest. Again we assured him that he was not.

He looked at Mr. Colton, who promptly told him that it was quite all right and that he must remember that, after all, he was in a difficult situation and should be grateful.

We were through with Colton for the present. He wanted to get back to New York. He presented his bill for services to Foxcroft who told him that it would be promptly settled.

I got Lardeau's funny looking foreign valise with its myriad foreign labels, and drove away. I drove past my father-in-law's home, pointing it out to him, and explaining why I wanted to go up to the Monteth home.

I introduced him to Mary and Mrs. Stapleton and, more to relieve the professor's suspicions than all else, I said, "We are assured that not only is Professor Lardeau innocent of the crime, but that he had every right to take the painting. It is a long story. I will tell it later."

Then I took Lardeau out on the drive and had him go through all that he did on the afternoon he came and took the painting.

He came up to the path and walked around to the library porch. "I knew that Mr. Monteth was there most of the time," he explained. "Right there was a gardener, with a rake. He told me not to wake Mr. Monteth. I promised and sat here, on the step." He sat down.

"While I sat down the gardener went away—over there, and into that glass house. I stood up and looked in, seeing Mr. Monteth sleeping. I could see the Van Dyck on the wall, through the open library door. That was when I was such a fool as to decide to take it and flee. I opened the screen door, like this—"

He acted it all out as I followed. "Closed it softly, the grass rug was soft. I went in, took down the Van Dyck, with great emotion. I put it under my coat and came out, like this."

We came out.

"Right there I saw the tall man," "Show me where, and what he did."

Lardeau walked over the grass to the corner of the house, stepped around the corner, calling, "Like this." He stepped into view, gave a glance at me and stepped back.

He came back to me.

"I hurried down the drive—and there, sir—you have all of it."

I thanked him. I noticed that Mary and her aunt were watching us from the window with great interest. We went up on the veranda and I asked Mary to have Davison serve drinks. Lardeau asked for wine. We had cocktails. Rapidly and briefly I told Lardeau's story, knowing that he would take an eternity to tell it.

"So poor Nola stole the painting, with other things, before she left," Mrs. Stapleton exclaimed. "We supposed whatever she brought with her was merely her own. I had no idea what she had, other than seeing the painting and the rood when she gave them to Gerard."

"So! Ah, you bear me out. You are the lady who helped Lutzmann's wife to escape. And we believed he was lying for two years, we believed she had gone at his command with the painting and that later he would join her and sell it. Well, it is all past—it cannot be helped, not at all."

He was a beast," Mrs. Stapleton declared. "Gerard saw him beat his poor little wife, and when she came to us she bore many bruises."

"Then, perhaps, he deserved the imprisonment. Who knows?"

I described the rood and how the knife blade was hidden, and I was more convinced than ever that Lardeau knew nothing about it.

When I drove into my father-in-law's grounds, Russell, the house man who assisted Mason, took the valise. I thought nothing of it at the time, and went up to the guest room with Lardeau, after the introductions. I left him there and came down.

"Again," I said with a groan, "I have to tell that story."

They were all gathered about me, asking if Lardeau had cleared himself, what he had said, and many other questions. Again I briefly outlined his strange, yet quite believable story.

When Professor Lardeau came down he was freshly shaven and in dinner clothes. He made himself thoroughly agreeable and told my father-in-law some interesting things about two valuable paintings that were in the reception hall.

Just before dinner Russell came out with cocktails.

"Where is Mason?" I said to Sally, and then remembered what I had asked her.

"Chills or something. Dave took up some remedies we have, and Russell took up hot water and rum."

"By the way," I murmured, "what happened when you announced that I was bringing Lardeau out?"

"Not a thing—you mean with Mason?"

"Yes. He showed no interest."

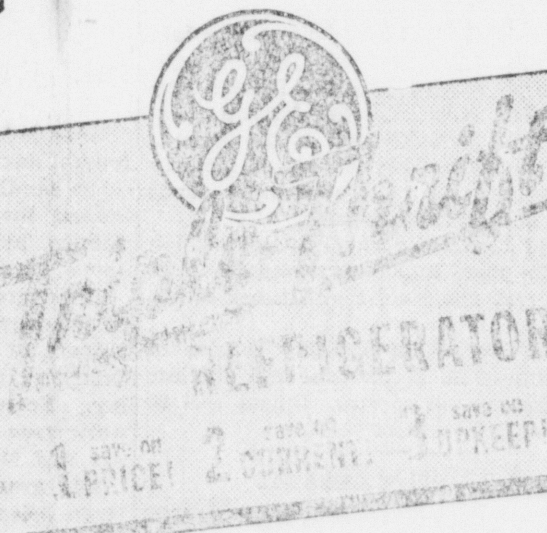

"Not a quiver. He was passing some little cakes and didn't look up. Whatever made you ask me to do that?"

"Wrong hunch, I guess," I replied. Just before dinner I asked Dave to go up and see how Mason was. He came back at once.

"He's a grateful chap, guess he has got some sort of chills, he looks all shot," David reported.

religion. In Germany people are forced to practice a certain state religion. People in Europe do not have as many liberties as the American people have. Many immigrants come over to America for what our country has to offer.

People in America elect their own president. The president is elected by the popular vote of the people. In Germany the officials elect the president. For instance, in a village in Germany there are three men put for an office. If the officials think that one man by the name Jones suited their purpose he would be elected. If there were seven hundred who voted and three hundred did not, the votes would be counted the same as if they had voted for him.

Americans get better pay for shorter hours of work. American people work about forty hours a week and receive good wages. Some men and women are going on "sit-down strikes" for shorter hours and more pay. If they had to work in deep, dark and dirty mines like people in Europe and receive only three dollars and twenty-five cents a week pay which is what the average American man earns in one day. They would surely have something for which to go on a strike.

Not so long ago in one of the poorer countries of Europe some miners went on a strike for an increase of two dollars and seventy-five cents a week. Imagine wanting only six dollars a week for pay.

Could our American man live on six dollars a week? No, of course not, he is used to earning anywhere from twenty dollars to a hundred dollars a week. We Americans are living in modern times.

America is also first in peace. In America there are no civil wars or revolutions as there are in Spain. Hundreds of people are being killed in Spain because two men want to be dictators. Lots of European nations fight and when it really comes down to fine points people do not know what they are fighting about. America has a very peaceful government. She does not wish to enter into any wars that may be carried on in other countries. America wishes to remain neutral. She has passed a neutrality bill just as Washington did when France sent Genet over to America so as America could help her in the war with England. Washington refused and declared neutrality. Later Genet became a citizen. He was known as "Citizen Genet."

YANKEE VICTIM

Baltimore's pitching sensation, Cliff Melton, who hurled brilliant ball for the first five innings for the Giants in the second game of the World Series at Yankee Stadium, fell victim to a Yankee rally. Here the young Giant pitcher is shown dejectedly leaving the field after he had been yanked off the mound. The rally gave the Yanks an 8-1 victory over the Giants.

IN THE FIFTH — HOAG DOUBLES

Myril Hoag, Yank outfielder, slides to second, safe on a whizzing two-bagger. Selkirk then singled. Hoag scored, and a deluge of runs, reminiscent of the sixth inning rally of the Yanks in the first game, took place in the second contest of the World Series in Yankee Stadium. The Yanks battered an 8-1 victory over the Giants, making it two straight.

H. S. ELEVENS READY FOR BATTLES TODAY

By Louis Tomlinson

Probably the most outstanding individual on the whole Cardinal and Gray forward wall may be out of action for the Bryn Athyn game here Saturday. He is Juenger's ace tackle, who is a tower of strength on both the offense as well as the defense and is the nucleus of the entire line—Jesse Van Zant. This stellar lineman was injured in the opening game against Langhorne and although he saw much action against Doylestown last week, he nevertheless isn't in the best shape to go into the Bryn Athyn game and for that reason may not see service Saturday. Van Zant is on the injured list with a wrenched right wrist.

The prospects of winning their first game of the season after taking two straight on the nose, are still none too bright as far as Coach Reimer is concerned about his Bensalem Owls.

The Bensalem boys will match wits, power, and deception against those set up by a fast and strong team from across the river who make the journey to Cornwells Heights today. They are the strong Mt. Holly club which last week trimmed the Orange and Black of Fallsington, 13-0. This was the first tilt of the season for the Jersey team who hope to go on winning and to hold their defensive power against their opponents.

The most outstanding grid game listed among the Lower Bucks County schools for today is the one to be played at Morrisville on Island Park Field where Coach Allan Tomlinson's Newtown Indians, and John Hoffman's Morrisville Bulldogs clash in a Lower Bucks County Conference tilt.

This will be the first Conference fray for Hoffman's crew who hope to break in with a win for they have staying eyes cast upon that County crown which they hope will come their way for the first time in a number of years—in fact ever. At the same time Tomlinson's boys upset a favored Bensalem outfit in their first Conference fray and are determined that the Bulldogs will be another of their upset victims, for they too have hopes of capturing that crown even if their hopes are a bit vague at this time.

Scoreless and victoryless in their first two tilts of the season so far Coach Mike DeRisi hopes his charges will come out of the doldrums and give him his initial conquest of the campaign today when his club tangles with Pemberton of New Jersey.

Currently the "Farmers" have battled two New Jersey schools—one home and one away—and have yet to score a triumph over their Jersey rivals. Therefore, they hope to take the spite out on a weak Pemberton eleven, who lost their first start of the year when they were upset last week by Langhorne. DeRisi's proteges lost their opener to Flemington at home.

TOMLINSON PREDICTS WINNERS IN GRID GAMES

By Louis Tomlinson

With the school season just about one-third wingward, some of the toughest games of the season are on the cards for several of the schools and all of them are non-pushovers. And with some of the schools being a disappointment so far while others have shown up fairly well, we delve into the precarious position of trying once more at picking the potential winners in the school games of interest to fans of Lower Bucks County. Here goes for this week:

Friday

Newtown at Morrisville—Bulldogs have too much power.

Mt. Holly at Bensalem—Owls take third defeat at hands of strong Jersey club.

N. J. S. D. at Langhorne—Redskins to top visitors by a touchdown.

Pemberton at Fallsington—"Farmers" to chalk up first win.

Saturday

Bryn Athyn at Bristol—Bunnies too strong for visitors.

Jenkintown at Ambler—We stick by Dougherty.

Tells of Aldersgate Experience of Wesley by the congregations of the North District, it was brought out, is the general apathy of the people toward spiritual affairs.

"Now I am asking not only what the major problems are, but what the major objective of the churches is," added the speaker.

Dr. Hand mentioned that the major objective of the church should be a deep religious experience, and as he visits the churches under his jurisdiction, he is asking that the members "think through that Aldersgate experience of John Wesley, so the church might benefit." "I would that this church might experience its enrichment and power. We should review the fact that preceded Aldersgate, and learn what followed, and we will be better prepared to evaluate what Aldersgate means."

The forming of deep friendships between Wesley and members of the Moravian band, with Wesley's consequent regeneration, were spoken of. "It was then that John Wesley had a deep consciousness of the spiritual things of life; and on the 24th of May, 1738, at five o'clock in the afternoon, Wesley came upon this passage of Scripture—also told the need of the church to fight the challenge of devitalized Spirituality.

"May the Lord help us to be more and more Bible Christians!" concluded the minister.

The message was delivered at the mid-week prayer service in the Methodist Church, with the Rev. Robert H. Conly, pastor, in charge of the service. A session of the local quarterly conference followed.
